

5 December 2018

To Whom it May Concern:

As of this date, there are no apparent medical or other reasons known to me which preclude the successful transport of this animal. Prior to any transport, SeaWorld veterinary staff will conduct a thorough review of the animal's current and historical medical condition. In addition, we will request that the Vancouver Aquarium staff veterinarian(s) perform a full physical examination that includes a body weight, behavioral assessment, full CBC/chem panel and full body ultrasound exam.

I further certify that I have reviewed the facilities and methods for the transport and care of the Pacific white-sided dolphin (Lagenorhynchus obliquidens) referred to in this permit application. The methods and facilities will adequately provide for the husbandry and behavioral well-being of this animal.

SeaWorld staff has extensive experience organizing and conducting marine mammal ground and air transports that exceed the standards established under the Animal Welfare Act. SeaWorld's standard of care is reflected in this relationship with State and Federal animal welfare regulatory professionals, as well as the Association of Zoos and Aquaria, and the Alliance of Marine Mammal Parks and Aquaria, and the American Humane Association.

Respectfully,

Hendrik Nollens, DVM, MSc, PhD
Vice President of Animal Health
SeaWorld Parks & Entertainment